

Preface to the first edition, 1983

Acknowledgments

I have been developing the material in this course for more than ten years, and during that period many people have helped me. The first time I actually wrote out a full version was when I was teaching (on leave from Reading University) in the Department of English at the University of Seville, Spain, for the academic year 1975–6. For this valuable experience my thanks are chiefly due to Professor Antonio Garnica and to Reading University, but I would also like to thank the staff of the Seville Department of English and the British Council in Madrid for their assistance.

I am extremely glad that Cambridge University Press arranged for this course to be tested before publication in a number of institutions around the world concerned with English language teaching at an advanced level. The trials have resulted in a large amount of valuable comments and suggestions based on practical experience, and I am very grateful to the testers for the work they devoted to this task. I must make special mention of three testers. Dr Roger Bowers, of Ain Shams University, Cairo, wrote a detailed and penetrating critique of the course that was enormously valuable; however, his connection with the course goes back further than that, as he gave me encouragement, material and ideas when we were colleagues in the Department of Linguistic Science at Reading University. It has been useful to me to have the critical comments of Professor Garnica of Seville, whose role in the early development of the course was mentioned above and who tested it in its later form; I am also very glad that a colleague at Leeds University, David Taylor of the Overseas Education Unit, was able to try the course out with a group of overseas teachers of English. I would like to thank all the other testers The British Council in Athens and in Naples, The University of Strasbourg, The University of Sussex (School of European Studies) and The Cultura Inglesa, São Paulo.

I have received a lot of help and encouragement from colleagues at Reading University and at Leeds University, where I owe a particular debt to Marion Shirt for her detailed reading of two drafts of the course. I am also grateful to all the students I have taught, both on degree courses and on Summer Schools; I have learned a lot from them.

Finally, the cassettes that accompany the course include material provided by Tony Fox, Patrick Leach, Doreen Lucas and David Maguire. I am very grateful to Eric Brearley for making the recordings and to my wife, Helen, who has helped me in so many ways in addition to being the “other voice” on the cassettes.
